General Information

All rooms are equipped with a PC, which has a standard set of programs on it that teaching staff use e.g. Microsoft PowerPoint, Word, and the Panopto recorder.

Laptop

When connecting laptop computers into teaching room data projectors, there should normally be no problem with most laptop brands. The projectors will generally cope with the most common video settings. However, the image quality will vary depending on the resolution settings and the aspect ratio. If a laptop that is set to very high resolution and/or a 16:9 aspect ratio is connected, the projector has to re-scale and may re-size the image. This will compromise the projected image quality which may or may not be noticeable depending on the amount of extra processing the projector has to do. It could result in:

- cropping of the image, where some of the picture appears to be off the screen and missing)
- loss of high definition
- the projector may flash the image intermittently, or refuse to display at all.
